Primary Role: Driver/Mechanic
Secondary Role: Fire Support

Physical Description:

High Side is average height for a human in his mid-20's. He leans towards 'biker' gear, as far as clothing goes, and tends to wear his bike helmet everywhere, or at least when it's not totally inappropriate.

Word on the Street:

>> High Side spent a few years playing around in the Redmond and Puyallup street racing circuits. Made a decent penny at it, from what I understand.

>> H.K.

>> Never seen the guy in person, but he's got a solid reputation as a driver. Rookie in the shadows, though. Seems to know a lot of people, though.

>> Stumpy

>> I've met him once. Kept that damned helmet on the whole time, like he had something to hide.

>> Angry Alex

>> I heard a rumor... I heard a rumor ... :)

>> Beaky

>> Shut your mouth, club-boy.

>> D/C

Personal Commentary:

Direct-port nitrous injection, four-core intercoolers, ball-bearing turbos, titanium valve springs... yeah, that'll do a decent 1/4 mile. But honestly, dude, that doesn't matter, really. I could probably stop off for take out and still outrun the cops... on a segway.

Roleplaying Notes:

High Side is very obviously the youngest sibling, and acts like it. He was raised by his single father, along with a string of mechanics, riggers and gangers, so he's very comfortable in most situations. He curses like a sailor, spits, scratches himself, and thinks nothing of it. He's also is a bit shy on the inside and is still not comfortable with recognition, even among his peers.
