Word on the Street:

>> The Captain's alright in my book. A little too straight and narrow for me, but that's just one Dwarf's opinion. And I still don't get the whole 'Russian guy = Captain Britain' thing.

>> Stumpy

>> I hear he came to the hacking game a bit late. Twenty Eight? Geez... that's ancient!

>> Rockk-em Sockk-em

>> He's a pro, though. No doubt. Quite a sweet talker too, for an orc. Love that accent.

>> Poe

>> I can talk sweet, toots. You betcha.

>> Angry Alex

Personal Commentary:

What is that? You honestly think that me and my boys are going to take dis job for the pittance that you offer? How about this one... You can give us 1000 more per person, and I will remove the virus from dis node... the one that got the candid shots of you and the little lady an hour ago... the one that also pulled your wife's comlink number out of your contact list... Oh? Now we have deal?

Roleplaying Notes:

Captain Britain is gruff, direct, and brutally honest. He knows that his size and build can intimidate people and he uses that fact to his advantage. He also knows that most people consider him just another dumb orc, which he is not. He usually lets others think that, if it suits him. Captain is a 'take charge' kind of guy, and will lead if no one steps forward first. He can be quite bull-headed and will often stick to his guns, even when he knows that he's wrong.
